

The Australian and New Zealand Intensive Care Society

Non-Discrimination Position Statement

The Australian and New Zealand Intensive Care Society (ANZICS) wish to make it clear that we as a society, value freedom of expression, diversity of perspectives, and the power of inclusiveness, and will continue to develop and strengthen our non-discrimination policies.

We are committed to ensuring that the contributions of all our colleagues are welcomed and acknowledged, regardless of gender, nationality, culture, ethnicity, religion, sexual identity or orientation. It is our firm belief that inclusiveness and non-discrimination broadens and strengthens our ability to advocate for excellence in patient care and the advancement of intensive care medicine both throughout our region as well as internationally.

The pursuit of excellence in critical care and the need to access timely, safe and effective medical care for critically ill patients is not determined by borders, culture or politics. ANZICS will always strive to ensure that knowledge, clinical advances and expertise are freely shared with critical care clinicians regardless of their background or location.
